How do we do it?

The OAMME Approach: Plan, Prepare, Protect.

Every client has a different risk profile and each job starts with a careful planning and analysis phase. We identify the threats, risks and vulnerabilities of the client in the chosen environment from which the optimal size composition and approach of the protective capability is determined.

Once the risk has been analysed and the team composition determined, the necessary personnel and equipment will be organized for the task..

Team operations are highly variable depending on the individual requirements of the client. Some clients require only a single protection specialist. Others may require 16 or more. Some situations may require armed specialists; others may make this approach inappropriate.

OAMME personnel have the capability to maintain liaison with the necessary government military, police and security personnel to insure the necessary cooperation and coordination of any host nation personnel. To this end, in some countries, specially qualified local personnel, often members of the national security services will serve in an ancillary role, providing the necessary local knowledge and language skills.
